Sir:

This, attachment, is a letter sent to you via Fax 1/24/02. I just wanted to make sure you did indeed, receive this plea to let the market place decide on what programs are best for the consumer. I have both Netscape and IE for my browsers, and much prefer IE as being better and more true to what a browser should be. I also, have Linux, O2 & Windows as my operating system, and again prefer MS as better all around and much more to my needs. So, why should those companies, that can't compete with one another, just either become better or stop "crying" when another company bests them on their own playing field? I don't find anything that MS has done to be anymore than a better competitor and present a better product for me, as a consumer, to enjoy. It really is my choice as to what I want to use, not the government or the "cry-babies" of the industry. Does one team that loses to another better one, file suit as unfair or do they try to improve and be better than their opponent? that is what I feel is happening with Microsoft.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter. I as a consumer will profit.
